TRESSED is a love letter to the women who raised me, my mothers and a constellation of aunties. Set to a score featuring Shipibo matriarch Herlinda Augustín Fernandéz and Ólafur Arnalds, the work explores how women lift, hold, and carry each other, woven through with Tla'amin motifs in design and movement.

can’t carry ghosts was a phrase I heard that sat with me for some time. We all have ghosts in our lives—not just people who’ve come and gone, but memories, dreams, regrets, all the versions of ourselves we’ve been. What we are willing to hold, how we hold things together, when we decide it’s too much, and the strength in letting go. I walked into this process with only three known elements: the title, a piece of music by Chopin, and the idea that there would be lots of shoes.

With the help of the Ballet BC Annex dancers and many phrases thrown away, sections cut, ridiculous tasks, trials and errors, we discovered many questions and new ghosts of our own. Together we have arrived here.

Thank you to the dancers for all the trust and patience they've given this process, thank you to Jordan Lang for being such an anchor for me, like always, and of course, thank you to Medhi Walerski for believing in me and giving me this opportunity.
